re: Mr. Leonard W. Sorg

Dear Mr. Poulos:

On August 7, 1984, I saw Mr. Sorg in consultation. Initially, I had seen this employee two years previously, at which time he was convalescing from abdominal aortic aneurysm surgery that had been completely successful. However, he had developed severe low back pain as a consequence of degenerative arthritis of the spine and this precluded his returning to work.

It was hoped that with active, conservative therapy, the back problem would resolve and he would be able to resume working in late 1982, but this was not possible. Now, however, because of gratifying improvement in his condition, he has been given permission by his doctors to return to work with certain restrictions.

He has been told to avoid lifting any objects greater than 50 pounds and to exercise care in all daily pursuits. He has taken a course at French Hospital in proper back mechanics and this has proven beneficial.

At this time, Mr. Sorg, who is nearly sixty-one years old, has no major complaints. He is not taking any medications and his daily activities include morning and evening exercising and regular walks.

He is seeking the position of Inspector, the job duties of which I have reviewed in detail with Mr. Soorg at this time. Aside from the necessity of avoiding lifting unduly heavy objects, there is nothing in the job description that he cannot do. Further, on those very rare occasions when he would be required to lift an object weighing more than 50 pounds, assistance could easily be obtained.

August 10, 1984

A detailed reevaluation fails to disclose any additional information of note.

The physical examination is remarkable for the absence of significant findings. He is 5 feet 7-1/2 inches tall and weighs 173 pounds, virtually identical to his weight two years previously. The blood pressure is 110/80, the heart rate 64 and regular, the respirations 14 and regular. The previously noted abdominal operative scar is unchanged and the general medical and neurological findings are entirely satisfactory.

DISCUSSION

Mr. Sorg is a sixty-one year old man with degenerative arthritis of the lumbosacral spine that was initially associated with severe low back pain, and which precluded his ability to work. With excellent medical care and his own full cooperation, he has done extremely well and he is now able to resume working on a full-time basis in the position of Inspector. As stated, there are several small preclusions which should not interfere with his ability to work normally in this role.

Mr. Sorg's health appears to be very sound and it is a pleasure to approve his returning to work.

Very truly yours,

M. David Cohen, M.D.
